Sand and Psyche

Introduction to Jungian Sandplay Therapy for Adults

16 November 2024
Embodied Workshop

The Canterbury Neighbourhood Centre
2 Kendall St, Canterbury, VIC 3126

9.30am - 12.30pm
1.30pm - 4.30pm

A series of sandplay images portrayed in the sandtray create an ongoing dialogue between conscious and unconscious aspects of the client's psyche, which activates a healing process, and the development of the personality (International Society of Sandplay Therapy).

Sandplay is a therapeutic method developed by Dora M. Kalff, based on the psychological principles of C.G. Jung. It is a powerful nonverbal, symbolic, and sensory form of therapy that gives adult clients the opportunity to portray experiences and internal states, often difficult to express in words and/or inaccessible.

Sandplay therapy activates preverbal and somatic registers. Using experiential sand activities and clinical material, Jungian analysts Sarah Gibson (Sydney) and Joy Norton (Melbourne) will introduce participants to the use of sandplay in an adult psychotherapy setting.

They will give some attention to the ways in which sandplay differs from 'sand tray' work. Using clinical examples, they discuss how the sandplay therapist develops a symbolic attitude and the role of therapist when the client works in the sand, the processes of silence, reverie and delayed interpretation. There will be an opportunity for participants to experience working with the sand.

This seminar will be of interest to clinicians unfamiliar with Jungian sandplay. For those already working clinically with sandplay the seminar aims to expand their awareness of the role of the body in sandplay therapy and deepen their knowledge of sandplay in Jungian depth psychotherapy.
