

Australian and New Zealand Society of Jungian Analysts

Invitation to Mental Health Professionals

Black Knot - White Knot:

*Psychoanalytic meditations for practitioners in indigenous relationship.
Jung's 'Psychology of the Transference' adapted for Australian intercultural situations.*

25 September 2021

Zoom

9.00am - 4.00pm AEST

Image by Craig San Roque with Japaljami Spencer

With Craig San Roque and others

This diagram suggests a variation upon the Rosarium quadrant as used by Jung to depict interactions of conscious and unconscious events in transference relationships, for instance, projection, desires, expectations, unconscious intensities, and confusions in thought and feeling.

Originally this image was a handy matrix referring to relations between therapist and patient, drawing also upon implicit sexual, bi-gendered or parent /child interactions arising between persons of European culture and languages. Imagine transposing this (simple) interactive matrix to an Australian present culture.

The Rosarium diagram can be used as a means by which to capture subtle processes that may be happening between persons or groups of people where indigenous/non-indigenous persons may be meeting and working together.

